Nelson inquiry disc is lost

Nelson was killed in 1999

A disc containing personal information has been lost by the public inquiry team probing the loyalist murder of solicitor Rosemary Nelson.

Investigators looking into the death of the forty year old said a police inquiry had been launched but the material was not believed to have been stolen.

Mrs Nelson died after a booby-trap bomb left by loyalists exploded under her car in March 1999.

The inquiry said it deeply regretted "the serious breach of secure data handling protocols within the inquiry."

The compact disc went missing on May 6.

"Immediate steps have been taken to avoid any recurrence and a comprehensive review of all aspects of data handling has been initiated", the inquiry said.

"Given the nature of the information, it would not be appropriate to say more about the material involved."

Northern Ireland Secretary Shaun Woodward said the government has "grave concerns about the breach of the detailed agreement it has with the Inquiry on the handling of data."

He has ordered a review to ensure the inquiry is complying fully with procedures.

Hopefully this is not another step backwards to the bad old days when occurrences, like this, where almost commonplace.
